Marty Poston, a 32-year-old black man, was working at the South Side Co-op on April 2 when a police officer confronted him about a damaged vehicle that was parked in front of the store. While speaking to him, the officer noticed a 22-year-old black man (who was also working at the store) walking down the sidewalk, stopped to speak to a group of juveniles, and then tried to enter his truck parked outside the store, he told HuffPost earlier this week. When the officer returned to the store, he asked Poston whether the men were associated with the shop. The 32-year-old said yes. "Because of his race," the officer told him. He was fired three days later. Poston's lawyer wrote in the lawsuit, filed this week in the U.S. District Court for the District of Idaho, that his client "was interrogated, detained, questioned and treated in a manner that was inconsistent with the standard of fair and honest dealing between a citizen and a public official."

What's New In?

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a liquid crystal display (LCD) device, and more particularly to an LCD device that includes a pixel array region in which a plurality of pixels are arranged in a matrix, and a peripheral driving circuit region that is provided around the pixel array region, and that is connected to the pixel array region by a plurality of scanning signal wiring lines and a plurality of data signal wiring lines. 2. Description of the Related Art There is known an LCD device of the type that is configured to include a pixel array region in which a plurality of pixels are arranged in a matrix, and a peripheral driving circuit region that is provided around the pixel array region and that is connected to the pixel array region by a plurality of scanning signal wiring lines and a plurality of data signal wiring lines. In the LCD device of this type, each of the data signal wiring lines is provided with a video signal, and the scanning signal wiring line is provided with a scanning signal. The display on the LCD device is controlled by the pixel circuit provided in each of the pixels, which has a pixel electrode to which a video signal is supplied via the data signal wiring line. In this pixel circuit, each of the data signal wiring lines are provided for each pixel with a transistor that is connected to an output terminal of a digital/analog converter circuit. With such a configuration, the digital/analog converter circuit is provided for each of the data signal wiring lines, and a charge to the pixel electrode is controlled by ON/OFF control of each of the transistors. As a result, when each pixel is turned on, the pixel electrode is charged to a predetermined level, and when each pixel is turned off, the pixel electrode is charged to a predetermined hold level. A display quality of the LCD device may be degraded by a change of the potential of the pixel electrode caused by a fluctuation of a power supply voltage. To this end, the LCD device may be provided with a holding capacitor that holds a voltage of the pixel electrode. However, if a storage capacity of the holding capacitor is made large, a display time period for one frame period becomes long. If the display time period for one frame period is made short, a problem arises in that a display quality of the LCD device decreases. On the other hand, if the holding capacitor is made small, a storage capacity of the holding capacitor becomes small, and a potential of the pixel electrode changes due to the fluct
