Making our old friend new Photoshop is not a photo editing program but a _photo image_ manipulation program. It can be used to retouch or edit the images you take with a camera. If you shoot in RAW (digital) format, you can use it to retouch your images. You can use the RAW and JPEG file formats (covered in Chapter 5) interchangeably in Photoshop. When you save in JPEG format, you lose some image quality because of the way that JPEG compression works. (For more on compression, see the sidebar, "JPEG compression tweaks") If you save in RAW format, you have no image compression. A RAW file is a highly compressed file format that allows you to edit your image as much as you want without losing image quality. To use

Laying the Groundwork for Editing

This tutorial is different than most Photoshop tutorials. For the most part, it's going to teach you how to do basic photo editing using Photoshop Elements. you will learn how to: Clean up images. Remove background objects, unwanted objects or distractions. Manipulate the color, brightness and contrast of a photo. Apply filters or other editing effects. Resize an image. Cut and paste a photo. Retouch and color correct images. We will also explain how to do most of these things in Photoshop Elements, and show you how to do them in Photoshop. There are some specific things we will cover that Photoshop does not allow us to do, like fix or edit RAW images. In those cases, we will direct you to the Adobe website for help. We're all so busy these days. There is just so much to do and so little time to do it. And stress takes over, taking a heavy toll on our mental and emotional health. There is more to life, and more to do. Self-reliance and the ability to make your own schedule can improve your productivity and the ability to accomplish life goals. Self-reliance is the main goal of the 16 Forgotten Laws of Longevity. It teaches us to: -Become the captain of our own ship. A self-reliant person is fully aware of his/her own capabilities, and knows exactly what is needed for completion of any task. -Learn to say no to things. We, as parents, teachers, friends, and family, sometimes feel obligated to be a "helper" for others. And, doing so can burnout us, and bring a negative attitude that can hinder our productivity. We can choose to say no and not help someone that doesn't really need our help, or to say yes and help that person, but know that in order to do so, we're burning out our own well-being.

- Build our own unique skills and knowledge. We do this by learning new skills, practicing them, and then sharing them with others.
- Learn from our mistakes. Without the ability to learn from our mistakes, we lose the opportunity to perfect ourselves and our skills.
- Be disciplined. Discipline is what allows us to accomplish these activities without being totally stressed out.
- Be disciplined in our personal habits, such as diet, exercise, and sleep. Some of us don't fully realize the benefits and risks of overworking. Simply put, lack of sleep will drain our energy and make us far more susceptible to illness, physical injury, and mental injury.
- Be mindful. By being mindful, we can live in the moment and concentrate on what we are doing. -Be mindful in our daily routines. This can include taking time to notice a specific flower, watching the way our hands move, taking an extra 2 minutes to soak in the atmosphere of a public place, etc. These are all qualities of self-reliance. And the more we practice these, the more self-reliant we'll become. It is difficult
