“The addition of 'HyperMotion Technology' to FIFA 20 allows us to do something we couldn't do 20 years ago,” says Alex Moore, FIFA 20 Lead Engineer. “We now have access to the data that we had before, but now we have it on a per-player level. We also have the capability to replicate that data with the real-life movements of the player on any pitch. We're all about making football as authentic as possible and now we can create the most realistic football game that we've ever done.” The 'HyperMotion Engine' is the new AI driving force of the FIFA environment. It is an AI that has its own rules, aims and ambitions. It has physical limitations that it will work within and certain parameters it will fight to exceed. 'HyperMotion' in FIFA 20 is a first-of-its-kind AI, the first ever to be driven by player motion data in the game.

'HyperMotion' will grow, evolve, and take on aspects that are unique to each player while being able to react to how they move. Players will adapt to the environment that they find themselves in. Players may see that the defence is closing down on them, so they will work to burst past their marker and evade the pressure. In our 'HyperMotion Engine' players feel more confident under pressure. "HyperMotion' has allowed us to let players see the space in front of them and the space to their side as they're running," says John Hight, FIFA 20 Senior AI Lead. "It means a lot of the decisions that a player makes in any game of FIFA, before they play the game, are really considered decisions.

Now there's a little bit more thought and consideration to every last player, and that means a bigger change to the game." FIFA 20 introduces a brand new sprint meter in the form of the "Turn Meter". As a player sprints, they will drop their 'Turn Meter', and any actions that they perform will be subtracted from the player's available 'Turn Meter'. The more 'Turn Meter' a player has, the more actions they can perform. As a player drops 'Turn Meter', they will slow down and their actions will have a lower intensity. It is the intent of the developers that

'Turn Meter' is a core component of a player's sprint. It will also play a significant role

Fifa 22 Features Key:
