Selective impairment of the myelinated and unmyelinated nerve fibers during the first year of life. To evaluate the first year of life, 64 children without brain disease underwent neurophysiological studies using somatosensory and brainstem auditory evoked responses (BSERs), visual, and auditory evoked cortical responses (ECRs). A combined test of the somatic nerve (sNCV) was performed on both median and ulnar nerves. At 1 year, ECRs and sNCV were normal in all children. BSERs were abnormal in 7 (11%) children aged younger than 2 years, being similar in distribution along the nerve fiber system. Abnormalities included a prolonged I-V interval and/or III-V interval, and slowing of the conduction velocity. In a subgroup of children, brainstem auditory evoked potentials (BAEPs) and BAEPs to short bursts were compared. At 1 year, the latency of the waves was within normal limits. In contrast, the waves were absent in 20% of the children who had been less than 2 years of age. On the other hand, abnormal morphology of the waves and/or a broad peak were present in 8/12 children. Abnormal brainstem auditory evoked potentials were independent of the presence of abnormal BSERs and were not related to motor or cognitive functions. Neurological deficits were found in 4 children and included nystagmus, developmental delay, visual disturbances, and a focal lesion seen on MRI. The combination of BSERs and sNCVs in these children, not in the presence of brain disease, identified children with peripheral nerve disease, confirming the observations in adults. Peripheral nerve disease was also diagnosed in 7 children with neurological deficits. Three of these children had MRI abnormalities and in 2 of these abnormalities could only be seen on repeat examination. Peripheral nerve disease was not seen in any of the children with normal MRI. We conclude that nerve function is normal in the first year of life. If abnormalities are present, they appear in the second half of the year, and a select group of children has a peripheral neuropathy. // Copyright (c) 2013 Mutual Mobile (// // Permission is hereby granted, free of charge, to any person obtaining a copy // of this software and
