Keyboard Shortcuts for Layer-Based Editing The _Layer panel_ (Layers)

is a good place to see whether an image was manipulated by using Photoshop's many powerful editing features. To open the Layers panel, choose Window → Layers. You can edit a photo with two ways: by using tools or by using keyboard shortcuts. You can also drag the background image to expose it. This makes the image below the background. (Note that although you can drag the background image around, it still affects the picture layers.) When working on a photo, first drag the background image. Then use the keyboard shortcuts to access the tools in the tools panel. (These tools are grouped together on the toolbar.) The following tools are available: * Create Clipping Mask \- Toggled by the eye icon on the left side of the panel. By toggling this tool, you can apply the clipping mask to an individual layer, a group of layers (which is very handy when you're working with layers that are grouped together), or all the layers that are in your document. * Blur \- Toggled by the scissors icon on the left side of the panel. The Blur tool lets you apply a blur filter to a specific area

Q: How to access content variable data from recursive function PHP I am starting learning the basics of php and could not find any clear answers to a question I have regarding accessing the data of a variable from within a recursive function. So for example: $myVar = 'Hello World'; function myRecursiveFunction($input) { // Would like to be able to access the variable // $myVar in this recursive function } myRecursiveFunction('Hello'); I understand the reason why I can't access the $myVar variable from the function and will explain further. When the function is called for the first time (myRecursiveFunction('Hello');) the variable is empty as it has not yet been assigned to anything. How would I be able to assign a variable to the current function which then becomes accessible from the recursive function so that each time it's called it's looking at the latest (updated) variable? A: Take a look at When you enter the function myRecursiveFunction you don't change the content of the variable myVar - that could be done by defining the function myRecursiveFunction with the content of the variable myVar (as noted by @Daniel Mann). But that would be just a shortcut, as you want to use the function myRecursiveFunction as a callback for your function myFunction. The problem is, that PHP, as M. Do said in his answer, can't change the scope of variables in a function call. Since the variable myVar is not in the global scope, you need to assign the content of myVar in your myFunction. One option to solve this is by assigning myVar to a variable in the global scope. For example, you could set the content of myVar in the global scope of your script with the line $myVar = 'Hello World'; and then redefine the function myFunction function myFunction($arg) { global $myVar; echo "myFunction()"; echo $myVar; } and call the function myFunction with myRecursiveFunction as callback. The result should be myFunction() Hello World Q: How to use

I searched something on Google but I am not satisfied with the result because I want to see the structure and the implementation of Umbraco CMS on asp.net MVC to get a good result (I am not new to asp.net). So my question is: how to implement Umbraco CMS in asp.net MVC and how to do the integration of Umbraco with asp.net MVC? Thank you! A: Using Umbraco is the easiest way to get started.
