What's New in the Wallpaper Cycler?

Wallpaper Cycler is a simple and light-weight application, with the aim of making the life of those who put the computer to sleep easier. The interface of the program consists of three parts: the application's toolbar with quick commands, a status area that displays messages, and the main application window. You can launch the program from the desktop to check whether there's a new wallpapers available. On each new wallpaper, the application makes a default background picture fade out, and the new one appears. After the cycle is finished, you can choose to view all the results, or to immediately go to the next wallpaper. Wallpaper Cycler does not make use of any particular graphic library or a bunch of third party tools, which is an important aspect for making the application efficient in performance terms. However, it is not a light-weight program, and it works slow and unresponsive. On our PC, it took the program eight minutes to switch the wallpapers for the first time. Low performance and poor response time It took eight minutes for the application to cycle through the first bunch of wallpapers. Maybe it is a huge number for a simple program that does not require heavy processing, and in any case, the responsiveness was not that good. However, if you are using the program on a powerful system, it should not be a problem at all. Wallpaper Cycler does not support the many types of wallpapers; for instance, it does not support PNG, PSD, DWG or TGA files, all of which are widely supported by other applications and toolkits. In addition, if you want to save your wallpapers, you can only do it on the local disk, which is not an ideal alternative, because it takes a lot of space. On the other hand, Wallpaper Cycler enables you to restart the application's cycle by simply clicking the right mouse button. Plus, it could be more useful if the program could access the location of the wallpapers, for instance, in case you want to upgrade your wallpaper without the need of launching the program every time, and so on. A simple, handy, and light-weight application For some time, I have been using wallpaper cycler and was always impressed by its simplicity. The interface is really simple. You can remove the wallpaper that you do not want anymore and switch to the other one, in just a few steps. No fancy menus, settings or anything that you would not want to
