Wednesday, October 6, 2013 Bunk bed I love the looks of a DIY bunk bed. Not only would it look good in your child's room, but it looks like a great place to stash toys and games at night. I found this adorable DIY space saver on pinterest. The only thing I added to this bed is a sheet of plywood and some wood glue and it was complete! It can be easily built. Click on the link below to see how to build a bunk bed that will work in a small space. I love this bed! The stitching is perfect, the color is so bright! I love the way you had simple clean lines, with pops of color. This is a wonderful bed. I hope you can share another post with us soon!

Q: F# simple example of a complex statement I've written a script to download a file of image links, which I've written in Python. The script does what it needs to do but I'd really like to write it in a more functional style. I've given it a try to convert the code in F# and it's not working. I have an array list of .jpg images, with each of the links being represented like this.

let rawLinks = [ "", "", "" ] let
stringList = rawLinks |> List.map(fun str -> str.Substring(str.IndexOf("") + 31, str.Length - 31)) |> List.reduce((+)) printfn "Results: %A" string
