Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a container suitable for intravenous administration of a solution containing the active substance and a diluent, and a method of manufacture thereof. 2. Description of the Prior Art During the preparation of an aqueous solution containing active substance and diluent, it is very important to prevent the active substance from being detached from the syringe and from being contaminated by the diluent in order to maintain the concentration of the active substance constant. On the other hand, with respect to a conventional container formed by molding a material such as a PTFE resin, a tetracycline hydrochloride injection solution and the like is liable to be contaminated by the resin. In addition, there are some problems in terms of the structure and quality of the mold. Therefore, the conventional container has not been used on an industrial scale. In order to solve such problems, the inventors of the present invention have previously invented a plastic injection container for intravenous administration in U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,932,279 and 3,931,634. The container is manufactured by molding a material in a mold, with two different kinds of materials being separated from each other by a partitioning wall and forming the partitioning wall into a cylindrical shape. According to the patent, if a cylindrical partitioning wall is formed by injection molding a mixture of a water-swellable material and a water-insoluble material, a water-swellable material (a water-swellable polymer) present in the upper part of the partitioning wall will absorb water present in the mold, thereby easily forming an irregular concave part in the upper part of the partitioning wall. Thus, the partitioning wall can be transformed into a cylinder with a relatively uniform sectional shape. In the structure of the mold, when the b7e8fdf5c8
