Q: How to sort a Collection of objects using collection.sort() method in Java? I have List objects which have a complex object called List parent.The parent is made in the form of parent is child one.Let us take for example, parent is child one, child is child one and child is child two. I want to sort the List objects alphabetically. What is the best possible way to go about this? Should I use Comparator? A: If the comparator to sort an Object by is non-null (in your case, it will be Comparable) and the natural order of the class is something you would like to compare, you would go this way. Comparator comp = new Comparator() { @Override public int compare(MyClass o1, MyClass o2) { // Order by whatever it is you want to return 1; } }; Collections.sort(list, comp); To be honest I would sort whatever the MyClass have as well and avoid the cast to Object and parent-child references. % Generated by roxygen2: do not edit by hand %

Q: In Meteor, how do I know when a method call is the last one to run? I have a method that updates the main collection and then goes through the results and saves them to an additional collection. My question is, if I call this method from a button, will it still go through everything before saving the results to the database? If it does then will it count as a new method call? Thanks A: If this is in some existing code, you can look at the section on best practices for asynchronous calls in the guide: If you're just writing code, you can use T.Async.wrap to build an asynchronous function.
