It helps the developers to improve the performance and quality of this app.Q: API call timing out on Android I have a question concerning the best way of handling android applications. I'm aware that the best solution is to use something like Retrofit or RxJava as it's tidier and faster than the Volley library. The main problem is that Volley takes a long time and I want my app to launch quickly. So my question is that: Is there any way to set Volley up so that it responds in under a second? If not, does it make sense for me to not use Volley and instead launch this fast? Any help is greatly appreciated and let me know if this question has already been answered and if it has a link to the answer. A: Here are few things you can do : You can use cache to make the request fast, the jar will manage it for you. You can use any json library, any of them. You can use retrofit instead of Volley, since retrofit uses only service. You can use URLRequest and volley is just one request #ifndef TYPELIB_INCLUDED #define TYPELIB_IN
