Familial transmission of head and neck cancer: a hospital-based case-control study. It was hypothesized that genetic factors and parental behavior interact in the aetiology of head and neck cancer (HNC). A hospital-based study including 230 HNC cases and 230 controls was carried out in the province of Flanders in Belgium. All subjects were interviewed by a trained nurse during hospitalization and they filled out a questionnaire asking about their background and family history of cancer. The relative risk (RR) of HNC associated with familial HNC was 0.65, and the RR associated with mothers having had HNC was 2.15 compared with those having never had a mother with HNC. The RR was 2.01 for fathers, 1.64 for siblings and 1.41 for offspring. For both parents an RR of 1.99 was found. Moreover, a significant interaction was found between the number of maternal and paternal HNC cases and HNC. This supports the hypothesis that, in the aetiology of HNC, genetic factors are important, and that these are not always dominant. The results also suggest that parental behavior significantly interacts with the genetic risk.

International transmission and spread of antibiotic-resistant pathogens in the health care environment: microbiology, molecular biology, epidemiology, and clinical considerations. Antibiotics have been the standard therapy of infections for over 60 years. However, with the widespread usage and the rapid overuse of antibiotics, there has been an increase in the number of infections that are resistant to the majority of commonly used antibiotics. Furthermore, the excess of extensive use of antibiotics has led to the spread of resistance among bacterial populations, including the increase of multiple antibiotic resistance and/or multidrug resistance. While the spread of antibiotic resistance is expected to continue and the current antibiotic pipeline is unlikely to address the issue, there are some agents in the pipeline that are relevant to the problem. Since the early 1980s, however, efforts have been made to reduce the use of antibiotics, including the restriction and elimination of certain antibiotics from animal husbandry or therapeutic use. Containment of resistance at a given site will always be difficult because of the substantial environmental reservoir of potential resistance determinants. Ideally, this environment should be minimized or eliminated so

Â .Q: iOS - UITableViewController makes inactive UILabel unselectable on selection I have a view controller that has a table view. In the view, I have several rows that have labels in them. The first row has a checkbox, and when selected, the entire row turns green (it's a custom UITableViewCell). When the checkbox is selected, I also select the label. When I click on the last row, however, only the checkbox gets selected, the label remains grey. I'm wondering if there's a way to make the label be selected as well, and if so, how? Here's my code: - (UITableViewCell *)tableView:(UITableView *)tableView cellForRowAtIndexPath:(NSIndexPath *)indexPath { UITableViewCell *cell = [tableView dequeueReusableCellWithIdentifier:@"Cell" forIndexPath:indexPath]; if(indexPath.row == 0) { UILabel *cellLabel = [[UILabel alloc] initWithFrame:CGRectMake(10, 20, 210, 60)]; cellLabel.text = @"Label"; cellLabel.font = [UIFont systemFontOfSize:30.0]; cellLabel.textAlignment = NSTextAlignmentCenter; [cell.contentView addSubview:cellLabel]; [cell.contentView sendSubviewToBack:cellLabel]; cellLabel.textColor = [UIColor blackColor]; } else cellLabel = [[UILabel alloc] initWithFrame:CGR 648931e174
