

Taking advantage of the iPad as a monitor As the first computer to be able to receive a video signal directly, the iPad offers you a chance to display a video image without needing a second computer to perform the conversion. In addition, it's a great device for still images and for displaying PowerPoint slideshows or PDF documents, as well. To view a video image on the iPad, you must buy a video-displaying accessory device that plugs into the iPad's dock connector or a wireless video receiver and then an Apple TV or Apple TV HD. These devices are normally sold separately as the iPad Dock Connector Adapter Kit and the Apple TV Display Connector Kit. Some organizations, including Starbucks, are using the iPad as a video display for employee training sessions. Another type of digital video receiver that can display video in your iPad is the Apple TV HD. Apple TV HD allows you to play Blu-ray discs, download and play HD video from your computer, and play media from other devices. For more information, visit www.apple.com/apple-tv-hd. The next time you want to see a video from a computer or the Internet, use AirPlay (yes, a third acronym!) to play your video or screencast directly on the iPad. Tap the AirPlay symbol to the right of the Share button on the iPad's screen, and then locate your video or screencast. Tap the AirPlay symbol, and then tap the Video button on the lower-left side of the screen (refer to Figure 4-3).

* The Lasso : This tool allows you to select a particular area of an image. Depending on the tool settings, you can make it a perfect circle, ellipse, or freehand selection. You can then drag the selection to a new area on the photo. * The Magic Wand : This tool is great for selecting specific areas of an image. You can select an area by clicking the tool with your mouse, or by pressing the Alt key while clicking. * The Pencil : A simple tool that is great for scribbling on an image. * The Eraser : The Eraser Tool (E) allows you to remove a particular area or path from an image. * The Sponge : The Sponge tool can be used to soften edges on an image. * The Blur Tool : The Blur Tool (B) allows you to soften or sharpen edges on a photo. ## The History Palette The History palette (H) is a place where you can see everything you did to an image—all the editing work you've done. As an example, you may see that you applied a Filter effect and then changed the effect's settings, or that you set the selection and then moved the layer that you used to select. Figure 2-5. The History palette is one place where you can see the big picture of how you've edited images and photos. See the end of this chapter for a list of what's in the palette and tips for making it more useful. The left side of the History palette is a menu containing a collection of tools and actions. You can choose from these tools and actions by clicking the button that represents them (Figure 2-6): * Basic : This button gives you the essentials: an eraser tool, a paintbrush tool, and the "set with" options. Figure 2-6. The left side of the History palette offers some basic tools, such as the eraser, the brush tools, and the "set with" options. range of 7-14-years. In our study, the length of the resected root did not negatively influence the root resorption. The maximum vertical distance between the resected root apex and the endosteal margin of the adjacent tooth was less than 3 mm in all cases. In 2 (14%) cases the vertical distance was between 3 and 6 mm. The horizontal distance was between 1 and 7 mm in the majority of cases. It is obvious that the horizontal distance is more important as the vertical distance does not influence the clinical outcome. In this respect no correlation could be detected between the length of the residual root and the vertical and horizontal root resorption. The radiolucency in the periapical area must be interpreted as an incidental finding. The function of a canine in anterior areas differs from that in the molar region. The presence of a fixed canine causes an increased contact pressure at the tooth's incisal edge and an increased friction, whereby the lateral incisal guidance is reduced. The lateral incisor also contacts the palatal alveolar bone. Furthermore, the palatal root of the lateral incisor is smaller and more sinuous in shape, making the lateral incisor susceptible to more coronal root resorption, even with minimal traumatic forces. This has been confirmed by the findings of many studies.[@B4]-[@B7],[@B15]-[@B17] In contrast, Schroeder, et al.,[@B18] Bahler, et al.,[@B19] and Robinson, et al.[@B20] stated that the presence of a fixed canine plays an important role in anterior root resorption. In this study, only 1 (7%) case showed an extrusive movement of the first premolar. This movement was also presented in case 1 of the previous study. In the previous study, the authors stated that the excessive vertical mobility of the tooth most likely caused the resorption. The formation of the lateral root may result in the extrusion of the tooth. In our study, the teeth were checked radiographically 3 times during the follow-up period. The follow-up period was 5-6 years in the previous study. This difference in the frequency of extrusion may explain the difference. In our study, the root resorption was presented after the first 6 months of orthodontic treatment, while in the previous study it was detected after the end of orthodontic
