The Importance of Vitamin D and Metabolic Diseases The healthy cells of the human body need at least 30 minutes of sunshine each day to produce enough vitamin D. As we age, most people become deficient in vitamin D and require a daily supplement. Research has shown that low levels of vitamin D can increase a person's risk of cardiovascular disease, diabetes, certain cancers, and autoimmune diseases. In order to achieve the benefits of optimal vitamin D levels, I suggest that you start by taking at least 5,000 IU of a vitamin D3 supplement daily. Of course, I recommend that you consult your physician or healthcare practitioner for your specific vitamin D needs. Make sure you're not vitamin D deficient! Vitamin D is an important nutrient for bone and teeth, plus it boosts our immune system. However, too little vitamin D can also be dangerous. If you are over 50, have been diagnosed with asthma, or have low-normal blood sugar, you may need to take a supplement that provides 100% of the daily value of vitamin D. If you are under 18 or pregnant, take 100% of the daily recommended value (RDA). How Do I Get Enough Vitamin D? A daily supplement is enough to get you by, but vitamin D levels decrease rapidly during the winter. In the summer, the sun's UV rays create vitamin D in the skin, but this vitamin disappears in the winter when levels in the body drop. This is why I strongly recommend that you get your vitamin D by taking a 10,000 IU supplement daily. If you are under 18 or pregnant, you may need as much as 100,000 IU a day. In fact, vitamin D levels can drop as low as 20 ng/ml, so I recommend you take your daily dose first thing in the morning. What Are the Benefits of Vitamin D? Supplementing with vitamin D can lower your risk of a variety of diseases. It's important to remember that vitamin D is not a "miracle vitamin" and can't prevent disease. However, it may help your immune system ward off illness and even improve your mood and reduce inflammation. Early studies have shown that vitamin D supplementation can be used to treat some common autoimmune diseases, such as Type 1 diabetes, rheumatoid arthritis, lupus, multiple sclerosis, and Hashimoto's thyroiditis. Vitamin D can also prevent the side effects of some autoimmune diseases (
