Parents Good News! I have a question about boys and shaving. I had an email from a mom asking a question about the safety of shaving boys. The email stated that her son is 7. When he was about 4, he started asking questions about shaves and about the "frost of hair and the mess in the shower" when he was doing "that". She is afraid that in a few years he will say "But Mom, how come I have to shave? Why can't I just pull this thing out of my face and brush it off like girls do?" She asked if there is anything we should warn him about. She has also asked me this question and we don't know if we should tell her that boys don't shave or not. What would you suggest? I would say that it is completely normal for boys to ask questions about their body and what they are suppose to do with it. Shaving is just another part of that. She should explain the why's of it, while keeping it fun. Boys are curious about the body and the world around them. Boys need to know how their bodies works, so that in the future they can actually be able to do things with them. Also, why should they cover their body with "frost and mess"? What happens to girls that don't shave? Do they think they are like animals? Tell her that boys don't shave, so it is a choice they make. Tell her that boys will likely get a lot more questions about it, so talk to her son and explain what happens with girls. She should always be prepared for questions like this. She should explain the why's of it, while keeping it fun. This Internet site provides information of a general nature and is designed for educational purposes only.
