Links: KKumarInorganicChemistrypdf A: There is a user agent string embedded in the request. This is what Google has identified you as. Google has a whitelist of allowed User Agents and you are using one that is not on that list. This could be the result of a bug, a virus, or a mistake (an accidently corrupted download). You should be able to see that now in Fiddler. If it shows ";". That means that Fiddler is now setting the User Agent to the string it has recorded from the request. Probably there was a strange request in the middle of a session to confuse the service, (one where the User Agent string was not part of the request), which is what is triggering the Google reputation algorithm. If this is always happening then you should be able to view it in Fiddler (or even in the web browser window, if it is browser based). Although masking has been used in image generation techniques for decades, recent trends have led to significant improvements in the efficiency, speed and quality of masks. In particular, a variety of masking schemes,
