What's New In InstantCrypt?

InstantCrypt is a software application designed to help you encrypt emails quickly and efficiently. The application is entirely free for use. InstantCrypt offers a user-friendly interface. You can easily enter your email address and a password in order to encrypt all of your encrypted communications. When you receive an encrypted e-mail, a rich content window will allow you to perform all of the necessary steps. This makes it easy for you to read, reply or forward your encrypted email. Using InstantCrypt doesn't require a lot of your time, and you're protected from the risk of unencrypted emails falling into the hands of the wrong people. The first part of today's podcast is a slightly lengthy discussion of one of the most exciting recent announcements in the world of decryption: the IBM-developed neurensic neural network. This is a machine capable of effectively analysing encrypted data. Let's hope that whatever this means to the government, it will not be the use of such technologies for mass surveillance. A hint to the coming story: I'm going to be playing audio from the recent speech by Edward Snowden and his comments on the subject of data security. The second part of the podcast is a brief discussion on the recent announcements from the EU about a new comprehensive data protection regulation (GDPR), and what this means in practical terms. Most of the discussion is about how big tech will have to change its business practices as a result of the new regulations (much more of this in a couple of weeks' time).
