FIFA 22 introduces the most ambitious overhaul of the UEFA Champions League since the launch of the game way back in 1994. With three brand new game modes, authentic re-creations of the famed Champs League, a brand new Hero Legend mode and social features all developed to take player feedback into account, FIFA 22 aims to deliver on the matchday atmosphere that sets the UEFA Champions League apart from other club championships and competitions. More than 1.5 million people watched the UEFA Champions League final on television in 2013. At its core, the UEFA Champions League is the ultimate competition for the best football teams in the world, and players are once again given the chance to take the field against their heroes from legends past and present, as well as their own club teammates from the past year. With every passing match in the competition, as well as its 1-off date with the UEFA Europa League in September, the prestige of reaching the final increases. In a move to create a better and more engaging experience at club level, FIFA 22 gives players the option to receive individual goal-line assists, with the more successful the player the more of a chance they have to be awarded a goal. One of the key changes to the game mode is the introduction of an all-new knockout system for the UEFA Champions League. With an all-new set of fixtures, the Champions League is split into 10 weeks, with each week seeing the group winners in a pot, with the top two automatically progressing to the next round. The remaining matches from the other groups will be contested in a knockout format. The knockout system will see clubs making their way through to the final, culminating in a final to be decided via a direct knock-out style tournament. The new knockout system will see the group winners progress to the semi-finals, where the final fourth-place finishers and the semi-final winners face off, with all matches taking place over two legs. Every week there will be a new match and the knockout system will see clubs progress from the first round to the final. Every game in the knockout system will have a unique matchday experience, with varying degrees of reward for winning, as well as different ways in which you can lose. On top of a new way of fighting for the greatest prize in club football, this year's UEFA Champions League boasts some of the most significant off-the
