You can open or edit existing images, or create new images using Elements' range of effects, filters, stickers, shapes, textures and layouts. More information and videos on Photoshop Elements at Adobefor so many things – especially people who use Photoshop to create the same iconic photos each year for events, to edit your favorite images, and to create and design their websites and apps. HIGHLIGHTS The most popular features of Photoshop Easily create stunning images with effects, textures, photo collages, layers, stickers, and many more. Always up-to-date You can always use the latest version of Photoshop Elements at no extra cost. New features and performance improvements added regularly. More than 600 effects, textures, and colors to edit and create new images. More than 100 easy-to-use tools. More than 500 stickers, textures, and fonts. Adobe Photoshop CC, which costs around $699, has some more powerful features and tools for designers and graphic artists but not every professional photographer or illustrator uses those. Photoshop Elements is a great alternative for photographers and illustrators of all levels. Here are the most popular features of Photoshop, compared to Photoshop Elements: #1. Layers Elements' Layers tool allows you to arrange your image in a complicated number of layers. This is ideal for creating professional images with many graphical effects and non-destructive editing. All of the images on this page could be created with only a single layer. As you create new layers, you can paint on the layers until they are the desired color, shape or size, then move the layer and paint a different color on the same layer below. Or create one layer with the desired outline and paint the color inside that layer. Elements' Layers tool is much easier to use than Photoshop's. While you can't have more than 300 layers in Photoshop, you can arrange up to 7,000 in Photoshop Elements. #2. Camera Raw The new Camera Raw tools are a snap to use and work much better than the old version. It also works well with Elements' new trimming and cropping tools. #3. Vector images Create stunning vector images with the new vector tool. #4. Photo collages You can create a stunning photo collage with the new collage tools. 05a79cecff

The Arctic sea ice is disappearing at an alarming rate, leading to concerns about global warming. Retraction: More than half of published studies on climate change and Arctic sea ice found "unlikely" or "very likely" evidence that global warming caused the decline. In 2006, the Arctic ice cover was 40 percent thicker than during the 1980s, when it has plummeted to levels not seen since the early 1980s. Nearly all of the studies reviewed by our scientists showed that the Arctic ice decline has accelerated in recent years. "From our results, there is high confidence that the disappearance of the Arctic sea ice is directly related to human-induced increases in greenhouse gases," said lead author of the review, Professor Andrew Weaver, a climatologist with the University of Victoria. "The polar ice sheets are mainly sensitive to changes in temperature, and when the surface is warmer, the ice loses mass and the thickness of the ice decreases." Weaver and colleagues published the review in the Feb. 5 issue of the open-access journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. The data was taken from a range of peer-reviewed studies, which were evaluated using rigorous methods developed by the National Academy of Sciences. They found that the scientific literature contains a substantial body of evidence that demonstrates a direct link between increased greenhouse gas levels and sea ice loss. The evidence for an impact of greenhouse gas increases on Arctic ice decline was demonstrated in: - Changes to atmospheric circulation. - Changes in surface temperatures. - Changes in precipitation amounts. - Changes to ocean circulation patterns. The strongest relationship in the last 20 years was between temperature and ice. "What is particularly interesting is that these scientific breakthroughs all happened in the last 10 years, in the same time frame that the Arctic ice cover has been declining at an accelerating rate," said Professor Weaver. "This suggests that environmental change is having a significant impact." In addition, the review found that variations in the northern polar jet stream, a fast-moving region in the upper atmosphere that determines the weather in both polar regions, are a possible cause of the Arctic sea ice loss. "A warmer Arctic leads to a more rapidly rotating atmosphere, which can cause a shift in the jet stream that brings warmer, windier weather into the Arctic. The ice is sensitive to changes
