Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a semiconductor memory device and a method for driving a power voltage supply. 2. Description of the Related Art There are semiconductor memory devices, such as a dynamic random access memory (DRAM), having a function for reading in a write data at the time of a low-active mode. Specifically, the semiconductor memory device is designed to selectively supply a low-active-mode-enable signal to a DRAM. When the low-active-mode-enable signal is supplied to the DRAM, the DRAM is operated in a refresh operation and an access operation performed to save the data of the semiconductor memory device (a DRAM) in the refresh operation in a read operation. When the low-active-mode-enable signal is not supplied to the DRAM, an active operation is performed in a read operation. Therefore, the supply of the low-active-mode-enable signal is stopped in the read operation when the active operation is required. Accordingly, the operation of the DRAM is efficiently performed. Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 7-164943, U.S. Pat. No. 5,602,691, and Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2000-308896 discuss a technique for efficiently performing a read operation. A DRAM discussed in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 7-164943 discusses a technique for selecting a memory cell by selectively supplying a word line voltage to a word line of a memory cell desired to read. U.S. Pat. No. 5,602,691 discusses a technique for allowing a word line voltage to continue to be supplied for a long period when a word line voltage is not supplied. Further, Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open No. 2000-308896 discusses a technique for performing a read operation with a high reliability by increasing a threshold voltage of a sense amplifier to be large during an active operation, and decreasing the threshold voltage of the sense amplifier to be small during a non-active operation. However, a semiconductor memory device is desired to be driven with low power. A technique is d0c515b9f4
