[The Complete Manual of Suicide] by [Wataru Tsurumi] download.Q: Finding minimal number of elements in a list of structures I have the following structure: struct bankAccount { long userId; List transactions; } and I want to find the minimal number of elements required to be added in order to form the list transactions to be complete. Explanation of its aim: In the case of transactions being a list, it should be possible for a user to have any number of transactions that are incomplete and after adding these missing transactions, the transactions list will be complete again. I have to find this minimal number. I tried the following algorithm. Set transactions to be null (0 elements) Merge an empty list transaction with the list of transactions so that it will contain 0 elements. If all the elements in transaction list are completed, update the list of transactions to be completed. But it doesn't work very well as you can see. What's the best solution for this? A: I would try to write a (method) function to calculate the minimal amount of transactions needed to complete a list with any amount of transactions: int[] maxFin = new int[1]; void setup() { maxFin[0] = 0; 595f342e71
