This article presents the wavelet decomposition method used to study the characteristics of the low-order statistics of beating time series. On the basis of this, a beating index is provided to assist in the clinical diagnosis of the cardiovascular system. By distinguishing the simulated and the actual blood pressure (BP) beatings and introducing the corresponding BP beatings into the statistic model, a time series is produced. After integrating by the wavelet decomposition method, five indices of the dynamics characteristic of the BP beatings are obtained: maximum fluctuation (MF), average fluctuation (AF), fluctuation of moments-1 (FOM
