MUMBAI, India (AP) — India will build a taller version of the world's tallest building: the Burj Khalifa tower in Dubai. "We are planning to build a 300-foot-tall building of maximum height in the next five years," India's minister of state for commerce Jyotiraditya Scindia told reporters. The statement Tuesday from India's junior Commerce Minister follows a Reuters report that the plan exists, and was held by a group of around 20 officials of the Indian government. The tower would be the tallest of its kind outside of the United States, according to Reuters. A little over four years ago, the current tallest building in the world was Saudi Arabia's Burj Khalifa, which is just over a kilometer high and sits atop a half-hectare-tall (4,400 sq. m.) foundation. The Burj is an architectural marvel and took three years to build. India's new planned structure, however, is expected to be completed in five years, according to Reuters. The skyscraper would feature a centerpiece taller than the Burj Khalifa, but with a smaller footprint. Standing at more than 1,000 feet (305.8 m), the building would be nine times the height of the nearby Taj Mahal Hotel. If built, the skyscraper would become the highest building in Asia, and would be more than 50 feet taller than the Statue of Liberty in New York. Construction could begin as early as 2017, India's junior Commerce Minister said.Q: Javascript code to prevent input field from accepting an amount of digits greater than 9 I have a form, and this input field is used to find the cheapest product possible, because I need the user to type a number.
