Carbon nanotubes are emerging as a new class of supporting materials for high-efficiency semiconductor solar cells. In this work, a covalent immobilization of high-efficiency GaAs/InP-based solar cells is achieved on the multi-walled carbon nanotubes using the in situ electrochemical reduction method. It is found that the cell efficiency is clearly dependent on the bi-layer thickness of the graphene oxide-functionalized multi-walled carbon nanotubes; and the cell efficiency is increased from 4.08% to 5.97% upon increasing the bi-layer thickness to 1.20 μm. In addition, the double-heterojunction solar cell reaches a PCE of 10.33% after being covalently immobilized on the carbon nanotubes. Company Website: Country 1cdb36666d
