I'm having a debate with a coworker and it seems like his idea of organization of the code base is quite unsophisticated. I've been doing C++ and Java development and most projects are on a small scale. I have my source code all mashed up into one big mess in a random CVS directory, and have no idea of where to find anything. Other than that, I'm totally used to the space/time tradeoff of finding solutions. I don't have any code to show because I haven't had any time to touch this code in a while, and it's not in any critical place (if you're sick of me saying this, feel free to take a look at my GitHub account for.NET/Mono development and see the project I'm currently working on). I'd like to preface this with, I am a capable C++/Java developer, and this is more of a rant about how I feel about working with d0c515b9f4

Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to interfaces for controlling media playback, and more particularly, to methods and systems for programmatically establishing and configuring a media playback interface on a portable media device. 2. Description of the Prior Art Portable media devices allow a user to play media content on a portable media device using a variety of different interfaces. For example, a media player may receive a media file from a portable media device or may wirelessly communicate with a portable media device in order to play media content. A common interface on a portable media device is a button(s) that is used to play, pause, fast forward or rewind media content. Typically, there is only one media player interface (i.e., button) on the portable media device that a user has to press in order to control the media player interface. In other words, there is only one way to control the media player interface, which may become tiresome. Other interfaces on a portable media device include remote controls and infrared or mechanical controls. Infrared or mechanical controls are typically not used to control media playback on a portable media device in view of these controls requiring physical interaction with a portable media device or a specific area within a home (e.g., a remote control receiver that can be placed on a TV). Furthermore, remote controls are not needed if the media content is in a single format, such as a DVD. As stated above, the method of controlling media playback on a portable media device is limited by the media player interface provided on the portable
