Hypocalcemia during the first 24 hours of life has a wide range of differential diagnoses. Early detection and treatment of hypocalcemia is important to prevent bradycardia, seizures, and respiratory depression. A premature infant without exchangeable serum calcium is at a high risk of having hypocalcemia. The correction of hypocalcemia is necessary in premature infants because its treatment may prevent neonatal seizures and respiratory depression.This invention relates to a method of storing data in a memory device. Memory devices may be generally classified into volatile memory devices and nonvolatile memory devices. The volatile memory devices may lose their stored data when the power applied thereto is turned off, whereas the nonvolatile memory devices may retain their stored data even when the power applied thereto is turned off. One of the nonvolatile memory devices is a flash memory. The flash memory may be divided into a stack gate type flash memory and a split gate type flash memory. The stack gate type flash memory may have floating gates, and the split gate type flash memory may have a floating gate and
