thing in different places, your elements need to have positions set so they all occupy the same spot. Try this: Sir Stanley Rous once said that "winning is not everything, it is the only thing." He was, of course, talking about athletics but the argument could be made that the same could be applied to the world of business. The Olympics are a great time to point out the difference between winning and not winning. Four years ago in Beijing, not only did Britain win three golds, two silvers and a bronze, but we won the "comeback" by beating the host nation,

China, in the 100m sprint final. Not only did Britain come back from the point when many had given up on us, we then went on to win the previous seven golds, so that our medal table for that day read like a Who's Who of British sporting achievement. And yet a few weeks ago, 648931e174
