Whenever you use Photoshop, you're using layers. Photoshop is a layer-based program, and a layer, by definition, is anything that can be on top of anything else. In particular, Photoshop uses layers to assemble and alter raster images. It's important to understand that the layers in your layers palette in Photoshop correspond to layers in your image. To adjust the opacity of a layer means to make that layer more transparent. Photoshop layers are arranged in a hierarchy with the topmost layer as the active layer. The active layer is the one in which you will do your work. You can manipulate one layer and see the results on other layers below it. The layers are arranged like a stack of books on a bookshelf; the uppermost or topmost layer is closest to the top of the stack. In this section, I show you the interface components and navigation tools, as well as basic tools for image creation and image manipulation. I include a detailed set of steps and accompanying images to guide you in basic uses of Photoshop. I also offer detailed information and additional tips for the experienced user. There are two major work areas: the Layers palette and the Photoshop workspace. You can work with the Layers palette for all your tasks (selecting a color to change or adding text in the Layers palette); the Photoshop workspace is for those tasks that you can't do in the Layers palette. (You can't add a bevel and emboss in the Layers palette.) Figure 5-1 shows the Layers palette. Figure 5-1: The Layers palette enables editing and selection using the various overlays on a photo. The Photoshop workspace The Photoshop workspace is a set of windows that you work in. Here are some descriptions of what you find in the various windows: Window 1 (the Layers palette) is the primary window in which you do most of your editing. You can also view selections from the Layers palette in this window. Window 2 is a panel used primarily for viewing select tools, and it is sometimes used to select and apply tools. Window 3 is a panel for the Edit in Photoshop dialog box, where you modify your image in the Edit and Organize windows. Window 4 is a panel used to change tools and apply them to your image. Window 5 is a panel that contains all your layers. Window 6 is a panel for the Content-Aware Move

Prognostic indices of recurrence in bladder cancer. This review summarizes our current knowledge concerning bladder cancer prognosis based on the individual clinical and pathologic features, with emphasis on those variables that remain significant in the new World Health Organization (WHO) classifications. Biological factors of fundamental importance for recurrence are: (a) anatomic features of the tumour at the time of presentation that are associated with disease-free intervals and survival in patients who undergo radical cystectomy, (b) tumour stage, (c) grade, and (d) the presence of invasion. For non-invasive disease, a novel measure of the proliferative activity is important, in that intermediate proliferative indices predict for tumour recurrence. In terms of surgery, established prognostic factors, such as positive surgical margins and peri-operative morbidity, remain valid for bladder cancer. Considerable effort has been expended to identify new prognostic factors. A number of promising individual laboratory studies have proved useful, and noninvasive methods, such as immunohistochemistry, DNA flow cytometry, and the analysis of DNA from urine and bladder washings, are currently being tested.Thoughts of a K-8 math and science teacher Tag: inquiry I was recently introduced to Wonderbox, an online learning platform that supports inquiry based learning. It is a great product and I have found it to be a fun and effective way to help students have an active role in their learning. I thought I would share some of what I've found so far. Students build deep understanding by pursuing a goal that is important to them. A goal is used as a reference point to keep the student engaged and motivated in the quest of understanding. Whether it be a science unit on meteorites or a math unit on angles, the goal is established and students can research and explore the idea of a goal in math and science. Just like the two questions I ask to start every lesson (see last post), students will share their goals with a partner and then investigate by researching, making and sharing their own findings. Resources are selected to connect to the goal. This gives students further insight and understanding in the unit of study. During the research, students are given a prompt from Wonderbox, such as "what is the size of the moon in comparison to Earth's moon?" Students are given a number of ways to find this information online. They can do

Q: Android SQLite: How to delete all the rows without using SELECT and WHERE I am using SQLite and I am attempting to delete all the rows in a table. I am wondering how to avoid the usage of the SELECT and WHERE statements and just use DELETE ALL. Here is my Code: Cursor c = myDB.rawQuery(SELECT * FROM TextFiles); if(c.moveToFirst()) { do{ String column = c.getString(c.getColumnIndex(DBAdapter.TABLE_TEXTFILENAME)); String column2 = c.getString(c.getColumnIndex(DBAdapter.TABLE_TEXTFILETEXT)); String column3 = c.getString(c.getColumnIndex(DBAdapter.TABLE_TEXTFILEOWNER)); String column4 = c.getString(c.getColumnIndex(DBAdapter.TABLE_TEXTFILEDATE)); String[] columns = {column, column2, column3, column4}; myDB.delete(DBAdapter.TABLE_TEXTFILES, DBAdapter.TEXTFILES_COLUMN_NAME +"=?", new String[]{textFileId.toString()}); }while (c.moveToNext()); } How can I translate this to use DELETE ALL. A: I'm not sure you can do this without the SELECT and WHERE clause. But you can use the query that you already created as an SQLiteStatement with the delete method. Then as you loop through the result cursor, use this statement to delete each row you found. myDB.delete(DBAdapter.TABLE_TEXTFILES, "textfiles_id =?", new String[]{textFileId.toString()}); Remember to wrap this in a transaction if you want the database changes to occur together. A: As Paul suggested, there is no way to do this without the WHERE clause, but you can use the results of the query to delete all rows at once, like so: Cursor c = myDB.rawQuery(SELECT * FROM TextFiles); if(
