According to a person close to the situation, the San Francisco Giants are seeking permission from the Atlanta Braves to interview San Jose State coach Ron Caragher for the vacancy created by the firing of former coach Bob Melvin. The person said Sunday the Braves have not agreed to permission to talk to Caragher. A man who answered the phone Sunday at the Braves' front office told a newspaper reporter he had no knowledge of the Giants' interest in talking to Caragher. Caragher, who was Melvin's strength and conditioning coach in Atlanta, has only been a head coach since 2008 and has never had the opportunity to interview for a head-coaching job. Caragher spent the previous three seasons as San Jose State's offensive coordinator, and San Jose State's athletic director said recently he was surprised that Caragher, who never had been a college head coach, would interview for a head coaching job. "I'm not surprised," Dean Mugar said in a phone interview. "I was surprised that Ron would have an opportunity to interview for a head coaching job. Obviously he's been a great teacher, but I am not surprised." Mugar said he thought Caragher had finished with that role at San Jose State, in large part because he didn't seem to want the job and because his work with the Spartans was being done by an assistant. Mugar said he and Caragher had a "great relationship" and that he never heard Caragher say he wanted to be a college head coach. "I think that's a myth, just something that got out there," Mugar said. Caragher has been with San Jose State for six years. He has a 45-35 career record as a college head coach. Caragher said he was not happy to learn of Melvin's dismissal on Saturday and that he hasn't thought about interviewing for the Giants' job. "There are a lot of things I need to handle," Caragher said. "I'd like to
