“The work we have done to bring ‘HyperMotion Technology’ to FIFA has been instrumental to the creation of this new motion capture technology,” said Julian Blair, Senior Producer of FIFA. “The results of this project have been absolutely stunning and we’re excited to see it in the hands of our FIFA Ultimate Team players around the world.” “We at EA SPORTS have a passion for authentic simulation, whether it's delivering gameplay that is leagues above anything else or being the best athlete in the world when it comes to creating content,” said Matt Bilbey, Creative Director, FIFA Interactive Experiences. “We are delighted with the overall technology delivered through this project, and we are very excited to be able to deliver a host of new features like HyperMotion Technology, Adaptive Referee AI and Premier League Add-ons in FIFA 22.” “Working closely with EA SPORTS and other Sony Sports teams I’ve been deeply impressed by the passion and commitment demonstrated during this project,” said Ferran Sánchez, Senior Director at Sports Interactive. “FIFA and Sony – I am so happy we can work together to deliver FIFA 22, the football simulation game that stands out above all the others as it provides an essential element to the Sony PlayStation experience.” Collectively, these teams researched and analysed more than 200 hours of motion capture data of top players in real-life competitions, such as the UEFA Champions League and UEFA Europa League, combining that with more than 2,000 hours of motion capture data of top players in college and summer international football tournaments, including the UEFA European Under-19 Championship. Players will be able to see how HyperMotion Technology works by watching a video showcasing the week-long motion capture sessions that were held at EA's football studio in Exeter, UK. EA SPORTS' "Experimental Teamer" classifies football moves by the type of action, with the pitch two-thirds of the way up the body. For example, getting a head-to-head challenge involves the entire body. This allows the pitch to be accurately configured to the player's position. EA SPORTS' "Experimental Referee" classifies a match by type of action, such as throwing the ball in or being fouled. This allows EA SPORTS to accurately judge whether a player's action earns a red card or not.

Other versions PlayStation 3/PS Vita editions were released for North America and Latin America (PS3 / Latin America), Australia (PS3 / Latin America), New Zealand (PS3 / Latin America), Europe (PS3 / Latin America / France / Spain / Italy / Germany), Japan (PS3 / Latin America / EU / Japan) and South Korea (PS3 / Latin America / EU / South Korea). In North America, the game uses the format "FIFA 22" for the version number, for example "EA SPORTS FIFA 22" for the North American release. In Europe, the game uses the format "FIFA 22 EA SPORTS" for the version number, for example "EA SPORTS FIFA 22 EA SPORTS" for the European release. The Latin American version was included as a free bonus in every new device sold in this region.

The Australian version was also included in a game bundle which usually contained a selection of games. The game also included an online pass which could be bought for a single price.

Gameplay It's better, but...

Where it's better than FIFA Like the previous version, the gameplay will be described as both good and bad. The good news is that it is getting closer to the real thing as a result of the improvements in the last version. The bad news is that it still has a way to go. As with the previous version, the demo may be played for free and contains the same content as the full game. It's available for purchase at the same time as the full game.

Cinematics In previous versions, cinematic sequences were always played as pre-recorded video sequences, with no interactivity. The extra effort put in for cinematics in this version meant that players and spectators had to play as if they were in the video, instead of watching video of someone playing as if they were in the game. One of the interesting aspects of this version is that the computer bc9d6d6daa
