For several months now, the Pakistani military has been conducting an air assault on the Taliban forces in the South Waziristan region along the Afghan border. They have been met with fierce resistance as well as reports of civilian casualties. According to international human rights groups the war has been going on for long enough to merit being declared illegal. Human Rights Watch (HRW) has just released a report titled "Pakistan's Air War" that details the "daily carnage" that the assault on the Taliban has caused. Some 12,000 civilians have been killed, a figure that comes from figures released by the Pakistani military as of late August. Almost three quarters of those killed are children. A further one in three people has been injured or made homeless. The rise of suicide attacks as well as terrorist bombings using improvised explosive devices (IEDs) and automatic weapons has left the military unprepared. There have been several international calls for the war to be called off. Countries including the United States and United Nations have made statements that the war in South Waziristan is illegal and called for the Pakistani military to cease hostilities immediately. HRW reports that since the beginning of the war in mid-June, airstrikes have resulted in the civilian deaths of over 12,000 people. It also says that nearly 45,000 homes have been destroyed or severely damaged. The report calls on both the Pakistani and US governments to halt the bombings and appeal for an open investigation into the military's actions. "It's been a long, costly, and counterproductive war that violates international law," Human Rights Watch said in the release of their report. "The Pakistani government should suspend operations and re-examine its strategy to resolve the conflict. The U.S. government should pressure Islamabad to halt the air war." The report blames "gross human rights violations" on both sides. HRW says that instead of destroying Taliban strongholds, the Pakistani military has been targeting civilian areas. The group claims that the South Waziristan region has been made uninhabitable, and that many civilians are now living in caves and farm fields. "Pakistan is essentially committing ethnic cleansing," Christopher Stokes, the HRW researcher responsible for the South Waziristan investigation, said in an interview. "The military is deliberately targeting civilians." HRW report states that the Pakistani military use of aerial assaults has caused

Q: How to view data sent from a USB Raspberry Pi 3 (Raspbian Jessie) I have a USB dongle, which I can use on a Windows PC, that uses the Windows drivers to act as a USB keyboard and mouse. I'd like to be able to use it with my Raspberry Pi 3 as well. I've successfully installed the "hidapi" driver using this guide I can make it work in the Windows environment by: Start Nmap Connect to the Pi's local IP on port 5735 (for USB HID) Push "a" Wait for a "ready" message from the PC Paste "b" Connect to the PC on the default TCP/IP port 22, and log in to the Raspberry Pi's console But when I try to do the same thing with Raspbian Jessie, I'm having no luck. The cursor never responds to the USB HID transfers, and I never receive a "ready" message. What should I be doing? A: You have to make sure the keyboard driver you installed is the right one for your keyboard. The standard one is called usbhid and is loaded when you plug in your keyboard. It is supposed to work out of the box, no configs needed, but somehow you need to modify /etc/udev/rules.d/97-hidpi-keyboard.rules to look like this: SUBSYSTEM=="usb", ATTRS{idVendor}=="19d2", ATTRS{idProduct}=="1d6b", SYMLINK+="usbkbd" After that, plug in the keyboard and it should work out of the box. A: It's complicated. To get it to work right with a Raspberry Pi 3, you have to install from the raspberrypi-device_support-extra repository: pip3 install raspberrypi-device_support-extra apt-get update apt-get install raspberrypi-device_support-extra Then you have to edit /etc/udev/rules.d/10-hidpi-usb-hid.rules: SUBSYSTEM=="hid", ATTRS{idVendor}=="19d2", ATTRS{idProduct}=="
