Photoshop CC is a subscription-based subscription version of Photoshop. However, you can download Photoshop for a one time fee of \$60 (USD). You can subscribe to it for up to three computers. The three computers must be registered and approved by Adobe before you will have access. Photoshop can cost over \$1,000 and up to more than \$6,000. This version offers new features, including multi-tasking, GPU accelerated, more robust performance, and more. For instance, it has enhanced image quality of its native PSD format files that support all color modes and bit depths. With the merger of Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Illustrator it is now a single product, Adobe Photoshop Creative Cloud. What's New in Photoshop CC 2018? Adobe has updated the software to include these new features: Designer-inspired workspace Support for new features in Adobe XD New offline editing experiences Retina display and retina iPad support New PSD add-in filters Smart Objects Collaboration support New mobile and desktop sharing GPU (graphics processing unit) accelerated performance Multitasking Multi-monitor desktop support Custom keyboard shortcuts Color Edge More robust performance There are some things that are not new or improved in this version of Photoshop. $$h^s = \int_{p_T}^{q_T} h^s(p, q) dp dq$$
, where we have introduced an arbitrary small parameter  $\epsilon$  for convenience, and given the above expression in brackets to improve readability. For the integration range of  $p_T$  and  $q_T$ , we use the same conventions as before:  $[\min\{p_T, q_T\}, \max\{p_T, q_T\}]$ . To find the numerical coefficient of  $s_0$  in eq. (1), it is sufficient to assume the upper bound  $\kappa \ll 1$  and consider only contributions to order  $\epsilon^2$ , the one-loop correction to the  $h^s$  coefficient. The subscripts of this matrix are irrelevant since they only reflect the momentum dependence of  $A_s$  and  $B_s$ . The leading order contribution of  $h^s$  is of the form:  $h^s = (c_1 - [1] + [2]) + [1 2] + [3] + [2] + \dots$ , whose determinant is  $s_0$ . Its numerical value can be easily obtained by expanding the determinant to order  $\epsilon$ :  $s_0 = -[(1 - \epsilon^2)^{3/2} - (1 - \epsilon^2)]$ . Since the coefficients in eq. (1) are now just numbers that depend on the values of  $p_T$  and  $q_T$ ,

Q: Ordinal and Cardinal Limits in Set Theory What are the "limits" of "ordinal" and "cardinal" in set theory? For example, in ZFC, any set is either finite or countably infinite. Also, in ZFC, every ordinal has a cardinal limit, but not every cardinal limit is an ordinal. A: An ordinal has no cardinal limit in ZFC. That is, in ZFC there is no ordinal strictly between  $\omega$  and  $\omega + \omega = 2\omega$ . For  $\omega = n(2\omega)$  is an ordinal. On the other hand, the continuum function is a cardinal function in ZFC, and the first uncountable ordinal does exist. EDIT: To answer the additional question "Is there some ordinal strictly between  $\omega$  and the first uncountable ordinal?" The answer is no, although it would be interesting to see if a set theoretic proof can be given. The outgoing Secretary General of NATO has publicly criticised the organisation's insistence on an immediate US and EU 'targeting' of Syrian chemical weapons. Jens Stoltenberg, speaking at a meeting of the Alliance's ambassadors in Brussels, said there must be 'no doubt' that Bashar al-Assad had used chemical weapons against civilians but also that he has 'not crossed the red line.' 'We have given Russia, the US and the EU the clear information that the use of chemical weapons will be met by a response,' Stoltenberg said. 'This was of course not a surprise, the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons has been informed that this kind of weapons would be used.' Stoltenberg also suggested that the gas used in the attacks might not have come from Syria as the substance is not Syrian and the timing of the attack preceded the country's expected declaration of its own possession of such weapons. However, the 'red line' comment is likely to spark some criticism of the Secretary General. Earlier this month, Stoltenberg said NATO had not set 'red lines' for action against Syria, but that it would be 'shameful if the Syrian regime use chemical weapons against its own people.'
