Q: OpenCV C++ tracker in room lighting I have a problem about building C++ OpenCV-Tracker for robot. In a ordinary room lighting (such as fluorescent lighting), the color of the target has a large impact on the tracking result. If the target moves out of the view of the camera, the tracking result will be very bad. I suppose that it is because the reflection of the environment caused by the target is too much. Is there any way to solve this problem? Actually my project is a video surveillance system, the camera is attached to the top of a table and there is also a strong light on the camera lens. There are many obstacles between the table and the camera like people and objects. So the reflection of human, objects and light is very large. So is there any way to remove the color change? I think the contrast should not be bad, but there are some challenges: How to get both the color and intensity of the light in the scene? Is there any way to remove the reflection in the target? Is there any way to solve this problem? A: It's possible that you don't need to remove the reflected light completely. The idea behind doing this is that most of the time the color of the background is same. So, what you do is match the color of target in some fixed frame. If you find that the color of target has changed greatly (say, it's become brighter or darker) then it's a sign that the target is facing away from the camera and you have to recalibrate your tracker. When the color of target remains constant and the intensity of the light changes, it is a sign that the camera is facing away from a light source. In your case, when there is fluorescent lighting, you can obtain the color of light in the background by measuring it using the built-in OpenCV luminance detector. You can do the same for intensity of light by measuring the total amount of light. When the camera is facing a light source, there is little reflection. So, the intensity of the light decreases and you would have to recalibrate. When the camera is facing the wall, you will have almost no light coming in and no reflection. So, the intensity of the light is pretty much constant. There's also something called "ambient light". In many cases, the ambient light in the background is almost constant and varies little Assessment of treatment burden in patients with comorbidity with type 2 diabetes mellitus on second-line treatments for type 2 diabetes mellitus. Patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus and comorbidities are the majority of patients with type 2 diabetes. The increasing prevalence of type 2 diabetes and several comorbidities in our patient population led us to assess the burden of treatment in our chronic disease population. We analyzed data from 1176 patients who were treated for type 2 diabetes at a hospital in Taiwan. We evaluated the treatment burden using the Short Form Health Survey (SF-36) and treatment satisfaction using the Diabetes Treatment Satisfaction Questionnaire (DTSQ). The domains of the SF-36 were transformed to the Standard T Scores, and linear regressions were used to identify whether the clinical parameters were related to the treatment burden. The sample was 78% male, and the mean age was 62.8 years. The mean body mass index was 28.4 kg/m(2). The mean SF-36 scores were lower than the norm for the general population, indicating a high burden of disease. However, the treatment satisfaction was high. Baseline SF-36 scores showed an inverse relationship with diabetes education (SF-36 Mental Component, -2.17; SF-36 Physical Component, -2.13), age (-0.37), and fasting plasma glucose (-0.27) (p 201 Ga.
