Eight years after it was introduced into the professional game with FIFA 11, FIFA's famous 'B-button' system remains a key part of the gameplay, allowing players to walk through defenders with fluid and accurate touches, or perform authentic shots from distance, like a top-class striker would. Co-ordinator of the FIFA development team at EA SPORTS, Sean O'Brien, said: “We worked closely with the expert FIFA community to create this totally authentic FIFA experience. The technology that powers FIFA 21 was born out of several years of player feedback and the introduction of this new B-button system was a key component of the player feedback. “The B-button, as you know, drives a variety of game modes, including taking free kicks, headers, challenging tackles, flying sprints and more. We’ve gone back to the development team to make sure we’ve carefully taken player feedback into account and tweaked the B-button in FIFA 22 to make it feel as authentic as possible.” Other specific features worth mentioning include:

- Player balance has been tightened from FIFA 21, where players would run with the ball but not have the ‘finish’ on dribbles. In FIFA 22, players move with the ball more naturally, with less distance between them and the touchline.
- Players feel more unpredictable in the air.
- Passes in the air are more realistic, as the player’s hand moves with the ball and the ball’s trajectory is affected by wind.
- More of the ball is visible, thanks to the new ‘show ball’ feature.

Membranous nephropathy (MN) is a non-light-chain deposition disease. MN develops in most cases over a period of about 10 years. Treatment of MN is mainly supportive, with dialysis indicated for patients with complete renal failure. Some patients have a rapidly progressive form of MN. In this rapidly progressive form the leading symptom is a rapidly progressive renal failure. In the renal biopsy specimen, a diffuse thickening of the glomerular basement membrane and the presence of subepithelial immune complexes are characteristic. Furthermore, large amounts of electron-dense deposits of variable thickness are seen within the glomerular basement membrane. There is growing evidence that a combination of two types of autoantibodies may play an important role in the pathogenesis of the rapidly progressive form of MN: (1) autoantibodies directed against the M-type phospholipase A2 receptor (PLA2R) that bind to PLA2R within the renal podocytes and (2) autoantibodies directed against tubular antigens within the proximal tubules.Late endocrine complications in patients with carcinoma of the cervix treated with RT and/or chemotherapy.
