Bumping up contrast You can easily increase the contrast of your image using a tool called Curves. Go to Image > Adjustments > Curves. From there you can add shape for contrast, or you can go straight to the details where you can bump up contrast, curve it and even create a black-and-white version of your image. Using tools There are a number of great tools that will help you if you need to draw or create new text. Below are some of the ones you might want to use: Let's start with drawing. If you only want to add simple shapes, go to Layers > New > Shape. In the shape tool you can draw boxes, rectangles and arrowheads, as shown in the image above. If you want to draw freehand, go to Drawing > Pen. Choose a black line or a black soft line. From there you can draw and erase to your heart's content. You can also go to File > Place, to add text from the text tool. Photoshop's text tool allows you to draw text by hand, like in the illustration at the right. You can specify the size, color, and font of your text and then use it to create a new layer, so you can change its colors and size as you wish. In addition, you can add effects to the text and edit its placement. Creating a new layer Photoshop's Layers menu allows you to create a new layer. It allows you to put images or text on top of each other. You can also draw images or even text on top of your existing layers. To create a new layer, go to Layers > New > Layer. You can then go to the Properties panel and set options like opacity, color and blending mode (overview: How to create a photoshop layer mask for transparent outlines). You can add effects and edit any properties on a layer as you wish. When you want to apply the changes to your new layer, select it and press Ctrl+E, to apply the changes to your all layers. How to create a new layer from a selection To create a new layer, go to Layer > New > Layer From Selection.
