Immunolocalization of caveolin in endothelial cells. Caveolae are flask-shaped invaginations of the plasma membrane that are found in certain specialized cell types and that function as a means of sorting various proteins, thereby contributing to their polarity. Caveolin (Cav-1) is the protein that is specific to the caveolae, and is located at the membrane edges of the caveolae and on the cytoplasmic leaflet of the membrane. It has been generally assumed that endothelial cells contain caveolin. In this study, we have performed immunoblot analysis to determine whether endothelial cells contain Cav-1, using rat lung microvascular endothelial cells (RLMEC) and mouse brain capillary endothelial cells (MS-1). RLMEC contain two bands of molecular weights 44 and 50 kDa on immunoblot, whereas MS-1 cells contain only the 50 kDa band. An antibody against human Cav-1 cross-reacts with these bands. We next performed immunocytochemistry to determine whether RLMEC contain Cav-1. No green fluorescence was detected in control cells or in cells treated with only secondary antibody, whereas the caveolin-specific antibody produced green fluorescence in RLMEC. Our results demonstrate that Cav-1 is expressed in endothelial cells.

Some time ago, I was walking next to him in the street, a daily thing, all the time thinking of him in a way that has been so distracting and painful, that I have been looking for a way to get closer to him until the moment that we met, he has seduced me completely, so that now I am in the state of submissiveness. I have been teasing for a while with writing a journal of my sexual fantasies and experiences in which I lived out all the scenes I had been experiencing in my head for a long time but always suppressed until today. I have always been attracted to men and women, I was the kind of girl that all the boys were after, both at school and in the street. It was until
