You could use the Clone Stamp tool to fill in a circular hole in her hair. But instead, you can use the Clone Stamp as well as the Spot Healing Brush tool to preserve the hair and change the shape of the head. In this example, you use the Shape tool to alter the shape of the head, and then you add a border around the shape of the head. To create the new Shape, right-click (Windows) or Control+click (Mac) the cursor over the spot where you want the Shape to be, and choose Create Shape from the shortcut menu. You also need to know about the kinds of shapes and how to change their sizes. With the Pen Tool (or drawing tool), as shown in Figure 5-1, you can create an image that has a form with three dimensions and manipulate the form so that it has a shape that's similar to a human head. Photoshop is very forgiving when it comes to the size and shape of the image you create with the Pen tool. You can create larger forms with a single click and then fine-tune the form by double-clicking. Adding a border is one method for adding definition to the shape of an image. For end-users of intranets, the main difference between an internal network and a public network is the access, i.e., who can access what, and through what devices. When people talk about intranets, they are often referring to an intranet as a private entity. Private intranets have a manager who has full rights to access the intranet. Employees have access to intranets to access the information that they need, either for work or for personal use. Because such intranets are maintained and supported by the intranet administrator, employees who use the intranet have to make sure that they have taken permission to use their assigned passwords, system configurations, and other information systems. Personal intranets are another type of intranet that is shared by all staff in an institution or company. Members or users of the intranet can communicate with each other, either by e-mail, messages, or some type of online software. Intranets are not only for business use. People nowadays have also built intranets for their personal needs. With the increase in the number of internet users, people have also started using the internet to connect with each other for various things. Because of this, intranets are today needed in most companies and institutions. When we talk about intranets, we are referring to private or personal intranets; we are not referring to an internal one. The aim of this study was to compare the sensitivity of ultrasound (US) imaging versus magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) and to correlate both techniques in the same patient. The correlation of the two was examined in 37 patients. The method used to examine the patients was the usual radiography, and then MRI, and finally US. The sensitivity of the method in determining the type of clubfoot was 92.5% for the MRI and 100% for the US. Sensitivity in diagnosing the severity of clubfoot was better for the US imaging (100%) than for the MRI (97.3%), for type was better for the MRI (93.2%) than for the US (88.8%), and for severity was better for the MRI (97.3%) than for the US (90.3%).
