Atherosclerosis is an inflammatory disease in which the initial cellular event appears to be the localized, but non-propagative, accumulation of cholesterol in the arterial wall. Cell culture studies have demonstrated that oxidized cholesterol derivatives have diverse, but often toxic, biological actions. This oxidized cholesterol has the potential to promote atherosclerosis, but the available clinical evidence suggests that it may be a marker rather than a cause of the disease. To provide a mechanistic understanding of this paradox, we propose that atherosclerosis is initiated by a localized excessive influx of oxidized cholesterol, leading to a progressive accumulation of lipid in the arterial wall. Oxidation of cholesterol by enzymatic or non-enzymatic mechanisms leads to the accumulation of oxysterols which may have biological activities that promote atherosclerosis. In this model, there are two parallel pathways of atherogenesis, a lipid-dependent pathway that leads to the progressive accumulation of cholesterol, and an oxysterol-dependent pathway. The balance between the two pathways may determine the outcome of arterial cholesterol accumulation, and this may explain the apparent opposing effects of cholesterol lowering and oxysterol elevation in the treatment of atherosclerosis.General information Envoy 207W06 The Denali printer and scanner is a single device network printer/scanner, which allows you to make the perfect first impression on your next important business document. I'm trying to do the same thing with Python. I have a script that reads a line at a time, then reads each line and checks for the separation between file ID and password: for line in open("log.txt"): if line.find("7033")!= -1 and line.find("220832")!= -1: print "Found FileID" This does find the fileID and password, but for some reason they don't line up: Found FileID fileID=30,00000 . The password line is definitely there in the text file though: fileID=7033,00000,Value = fileID=220832,00000,Value = fileID=11649,00000,Value = fileID=12047,00000,Value = fileID=8031,00000,Value = If I do this: for line in open("log.txt"): for char in line: if char == "fileID=": print "Found fileID" It finds the fileID line, but it gets stuck in an infinite loop - it won't let me go on past the fileID line. This is the same text file I'm using as input. I've done some experimenting but haven't been able to find any combination of commands that would work. Any ideas what I'm doing wrong? A: if the values in your file are in the format of then: for line in open("log.txt"): if line.find("fileID=")!= -1: print "Found FileID" for letter in line: if letter == "=": print "Found password" otherwise, if they are not in that format, see @manijam's answer: for line in open("log.txt"): if line.find("fileID=")!= -1:
