As a personal foghorn fan of Commodore's work (I'm in the 8 bits club, where the Peter Principle is some sort of a principle), I like to keep them on their toes, especially when I feel that what they're doing is not "cool" or "cinematic" enough for my tastes. I think that 3/8" is a bit too large for the point of view of a 16mm movie. The best choice is something like 1/2". Daniel Rabinowitz has a good article in AV Cinemas Handbook on this. Click to expand... Yeah, I remember reading about that. It'd have to be a truly large final projector for an 1/2" final to be usable. Yeah, I remember reading about that. It'd have to be a truly large final projector for an 1/2" final to be usable. Click to expand... Absolutely! I haven't used a 16mm projector for maybe 4 years (been using an EVO since) but I was doing some research for those last few weeks. Now, you really want a UPA for small formats. Who knows why, but the absolutely smallest ones I've seen (made by UPA) are 1:12.16 (that's 1:12 "fats") and are still bigger than a "normal" 1/2". I've seen a few, and they're wonderful, but that's all that the UPA folks make them anymore I think. I think most people don't realize how huge 1:12.16 is and how much it's used on TV for subchannels. Underwater footage looks fantastic, probably because of the low lighting, large aspect ratio, and relative weightlessness of the camera. That's the one great thing about this technology. Also, what equipment do you guys use? I've been tossing around the idea of adding something like a Gopro to my PT8-MP, but have noticed that without knowing how the interface of the HVS for PT8-MP works, it looks a little clunky. I'm personally limited to what I can find locally, although as far as I can tell, there is a need to send it to the lab for processing. I agree that Apple really doesn't want to make a "rental" solution, which is probably why the BD-XL is available in 120, 133, and 160 flavors. I
