3. Click the New Layer icon, found in the lower-left corner, at the bottom of the Layers panel. You see the dialog box shown in Figure 13-8. Figure 13-8. This dialog box appears when you create a new layer in Photoshop. This version includes only the options for the current image. Notice that, if you turn on "Apply to Layers," you see a new option for applying image editing to other images in the stack. You'll see that dialog box on a much more crowded version later in this chapter. The box you see on the left is the current image. The layers dialog box (shown on the right in Figure 13-9) has five main areas. To the left are controls for you to click to open the dialog box for that area. In the panel area, the options you see depend on the current image. The five areas include the following: • Layers Panel. This area contains the standard Layers panel. You work with it in most ways as you would in any program, using commands that include the Layer commands and commands that apply to layers. • Layer Styles. In this area, you see the dialog box shown in Figure 13-7. You have many options to control the look of a layer, including Matte, Gradient, Drop Shadow, Bevel and Emboss, and Rounded Rectangle. You can see that you can also apply a Layer Mask to your image. • Layer Comps. In this area, you see the dialog box in Figure 13-7. Notice that there are two settings here. The left, shown in the middle of Figure 13-10, indicates whether the layer image is transposed or mirrored. Transposed means that if you look at the layer from a top-down view, all the lines of the image are in the same direction. Mirroring reverses the image so that all lines are parallel. Figure 13-9. The Layers panel in Photoshop is used to manipulate or edit layers in the image. You can choose from a number of different options for these layers, including Paint and Brush, or use the Layer Comps palette to apply adjustments to a layer and then create a duplicate layer, all in one place. • Layer Options. The dialog box in Figure 13-10. This setting gives you a bit more control for each layer. You can choose from the Color

Version History Photoshop Elements 9 was first released in November 2012 as a stand-alone product but it is now bundled with Adobe Photoshop. The program now has many more features but it lacks the simplicity of Photoshop. Version 10 of Elements was released in August 2014 and introduced 3D Printing, more templates and improved RAW support. If you are already using a paid version of Photoshop such as Photoshop CC or Photoshop CS6 or if you are in the process of upgrading your existing copy of Photoshop you can buy the Elements version from the Adobe store. If you aren't on Windows 10 or Windows 10 Pro you can download the trial version from the Adobe website. Elements 10 can be installed on Windows 7 or Windows 8. Photoshop Elements 13 was released in July 2017. In September 2017, Adobe introduced Photoshop Express, a free online photo editor built on Adobe Edge. Users can create and share images from their mobile devices. Features A complete photo editor with an easy-to-use user interface. The interface features tools that are easy to find and use. Photoshop Elements software provides a fast, reliable and highly portable image editing solution. The program contains several image retouching tools and the number of options is endless. Photoshop Elements includes 20 different image editing and retouching tools (17 photo editing tools and 3 retouching tools) and 4 composition tools. Tools Adobe Photoshop is a full feature photo editor. It contains most of the features that a professional photographer would need for managing all different types of photographs. Adobe Elements has the same tools as Photoshop Elements but it lacks many features, especially for advanced editing. The most notable differences are the lack of most advanced features, such as image adjustment layers, Content Aware Fill, Content-Aware Move and more. Compatibility Photoshop CS6, Photoshop CC and Photoshop CS6 Extended Edition. The previous versions of Photoshop Elements are only compatible with Photoshop Elements. Supported operating systems: Mac OS X Windows Manufacturer Adobe Photoshop Express Adobe Elements and Photoshop Elements version 9 and 10 have been discontinued. Photoshop Express can only be used online. Photoshop Express is in beta and could be discontinued by Adobe at any time. The software has been tested using the following OSes: OSX 10.9 Windows 05a79cecf

Weber+Sommers Weber+Sommers were a British comedy duo. They started their careers as bumboys in the 1950s, and after a series of comedic sketches and recordings they performed as a duo called "Herbert and Ralph", in shows such as the BBC shows Sunday Night at the London Palladium and Comedy Bandwagon. Career Weber+Sommers were two boys from Accrington in Lancashire. They got their break when they were invited to perform at the 1957 Edinburgh Festival in Scotland. Their act became a huge success, and they had a lucrative television show, The Frank Harris Talent Spotter in 1960. They also made "A Bit of a Do" in 1961 and won the Royal Television Society Award for "Most Entertaining Half Hour of the Year" for their show with producer Tony Gibling. Their act was based on the comedy duo Two Ronnies style – they were dressed in Teddy Boy or 'Lawn Tennis' style suits, and sometimes wore curly sideburns or moustaches. Their early recordings are not easy to find. They recorded for Parlophone in the early 1960s. Their biggest song, an instrumental cover of Buddy Holly's "Everyday" was released in 1964 and reached number 24 in the charts, while the follow up, "Swinging Yorkshireman", peaked at number 19. However, none of their songs hit the charts. Their subsequent recordings were for BBC Radio and the BBC Light Programme, and they appeared regularly on the television variety show Oh Mr Porter!. Backing band Despite their television success, they were poorly paid and had to support themselves by playing at pubs and other venues. They subsequently formed a band of musicians and singers that toured as the "Bible Alley Singers". What's New In?

City of Angels is usually a pretty safe place — but this week, something big happened. On Sunday, May 3, a shooting happened in Burbank, California. Two people were shot with a handgun. According to CBS Los Angeles, that event sent a ripple of fear through the city. Public schools in Burbank shut down for the day on Monday, May 4, in order to let students know that they were safe. And in the resulting chaos, a teenage girl was transported to the hospital. On Tuesday, Burbank's police chief tweeted out this image: Police chief Chris Cochran made the tweet with his heart. He wrote, "My heart breaks for the Burbank teen who was shot. #BurbankStrong." He may or may not have been referring to a tweet by a Burbank resident, but he also wrote, "I can't imagine what that young person feels like right now. His family, friends, teachers must be devastated." When the Burbank Police Department released photos of the teenager, they wanted the public to identify him. According to CBS Los Angeles, they also published this photo of him in the hospital, and asked the public to keep an eye out for him. The police noted that "this is a big piece of the puzzle," and that they were working to learn who the shooter was. The city's police chief noted that this was happening less than a mile from where officers work and lived. And, of course, Burbank is a safe city. But the fact that someone could come so close to the law enforcement community is still a terrifying reminder of the risks police face every day. The Burbank teen's mother appears to be grieving, and we wish her and her family the best. This whole tragedy is a reminder that no matter how safe a town, a neighborhood, or a city is, we never know when random tragedy can strike. It seems that the police chief recognizes this, as he also noted, "This is not a reflection on our strong policing community." Our thoughts are with the Burbank teen and his family, and all those who have suffered from gun violence in cities and towns across America.Q: Is a thread that calls System.exit considered a daemon thread?
