hosts discussed Kanye West's pro-Trump statement on live TV, a strong economy and whether or not Melania

Trump and Barron Trump had ‘had their talk.’ Seth Meyers Late-night hosts had mixed opinions on Kanye West’s “brocialist” speech to the Conservative Political Action Committee. “I have to admit, I find this speech incredibly enraging.” said Stephen Colbert. “Not because he’s some sort of liberal snowflake, not because he put in his own money to get there, but because he's playing two completely different roles." "The first is the anti-Trump liberal who feels that he has an obligation to march in the March for Truth with a smile on his face," said Colbert. "But then he steps into the big boy room, and he becomes the conservative racist who proclaims that he is pro-Trump.” Colbert said that the first idea was a little crazy because “anyone who goes to any conference in Washington D.C. would encounter plenty of crazy people willing to proclaim ‘I’m on the side of truth.’”

But then West interrupted the Republican National Committee and started speaking over his microphone. “By doing that, West not only alienated himself from the sensible conservatives who are just trying to go to a party,” said Colbert. “He also alienated all the weak liberals who were afraid to publicly say what they really think.”

Jimmy Kimmel Jimmy Kimmel did not think the speech was shocking.

“The conversation is quickly moving from the 23rd Amendment to how much the Trump administration is disrespecting dead NBA players,” said Kimmel.

August 31, 2017 - Cloud Computing, DRM, SSDs, Virtualization, Virtualization Offerings. Sorry, I can't share your link anymore as it's been restricted. Can someone please tell me what the status is on this. Thanks, Roman A: It seems your hotspot is not found in the rar. Q: Proof for my own regulator circuit question I am trying to understand a proof (picture below) for a specific regulator circuit, and I need to prove that $V_{\text{out}} = k V_{\text{in}}$ The author goes straight to the mathematical definitions of voltage and current and only defines them in that case. Since my question is related to understanding why this assumption is made I need to know why that is. A: If you are not convinced of the validity of that particular assumption, just try finding a nonlinear circuit in which you know the steady state result can be shown to be proportional to the input voltage. A: The easiest way to get around this is to prove (1) that $V_{\text{diode}} = I_0 R$, (2) that a diode drop of $I_0 R$ across the resistor R generates a voltage drop of $\frac{I_0}{R} R$, and (3) that the diode drop of $\frac{I_0}{R} R$ across R in series with R makes the resistance across R R_{out} . Then it's easy to derive the final result. If you know the values of R and I_0 you can calculate the value of $\frac{I_0}{R} R$ and then multiply by R_{out} to obtain the total output voltage across R_{out} that produces a voltage drop of $I_0 R$ across R . If you aren't familiar with some of these notions, don't sweat it, keep reading. Q: Uncaught TypeError: Cannot read property 'edges' of undefined I'm trying to create a graph from
