For the first time in the history of the franchise, all of FIFA's major tournaments will have a 32-player limit. Starting today, all of FIFA's World Cup matches (21 matches for the tournament) will be made available to play with 22 international players. This new maximum roster cap is designed to allow for more variety and replayability in gameplay during the World Cup. However, two of the five remaining World Cup matches have already passed by and we are left with just two remaining matches that feature eight teams and play for a spot in the 32-player tournament. The two remaining World Cup matches are both Group Stage matches. Therefore, FIFA 19 will remain the definitive version of FIFA's World Cup for the remainder of the tournament. FIFA 20 has received the first patch to combat lag issues that cropped up in the game following its release. The patch addresses various issues including blocked shots, misplaced passes and pitch disruptions, all of which are now more efficiently captured. FIFA 20 also includes a different physics engine to a more realistic rendering with realistic physics for new construction and demolition, like sidewalks, roads, as well as the physics of the turf. For the pitch, FIFA 20 completely redeveloped the pitch using the brand new engine and now FIFA understands the movement of players, ball and pitches more accurately. The new generation FIFA is more of a team game. In FIFA 20, "Whole new Gameplay Mechanics" have been incorporated, including new goalkeeper AI, ball physics and the ability to use a player's body as a shield.
