Roblox is an online game creation system and game platform that was developed in 2004 by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel. The platform allows its users to create 3D games and applications and play them through their web browser, iOS, Android, Windows, or macOS operating systems. Roblox's games are written in the programming language Lua. Roblox was officially released on August 10, 2006. At the time of its release, Roblox was the largest social game network on the web. Roblox originally had more than 100 different network games, all developed by third-party users. About a year later, developers began to create games for Roblox, and the platform now has more than 300 different games. Roblox has seen significant growth since its launch and is now a multi-billion-dollar business, with revenue of over $500 million in 2018. Roblox is available in more than 50 languages and is playable through a variety of devices, including PCs, smartphones, tablets, and video game consoles. In the mid 2010s, the platform expanded its business into children's apps, toys, and interactive television and television-based media. Values::all() in Laravel? I need to get the category names from all the posts under that category which can be the topic. For example, the following data: $categories = $posts->all()->category; I have tried: $categoryNames = Category::all()->values()->name(); Then I make another call to get the posts that belong to a certain category: $posts = Post::where('category_id', '=', $categoryId)->get(); My problems are: The category is not loaded yet, so it does not work. I have tried $posts = Post::where('category_id', '=', $categoryId)->where('category.id', '=', $categoryName)->get(); This too does not work. Is there any proper way to solve this problem? A: You don't need to do that a loop. You can do this Post::whereIn('category_id', $categories)->where('category.id', $categoryId)->get(); Then you get all posts related with the category which had the $categoryId. However, I don't see why you need a where() in the whereIn().

```
